To Whom It May Concern,

About Me

As big fan of Go language, I've been working with Go language for years in both personal and commercial projects.

As a huge fan of Go language, I've been working with Go language for years embedding go projects into primarily python asyncio stack.

I have been reached out by League Inc. about 2 years ago when you were smaller. First of all, your stack caught by eyes. I was working on a number of personal projects using Go and Nats.io and I believe your initial job post said you guys were using exact same. I thought I would fit in well but due to timing, wasn't able to further pursue the opportunity. Since then, I've joined Compose, IBM Cloud company developing cloud platform for database-as-a-service offering. As a platform engineer, I've designed countless Go microservices to support our massive scale infrastructure. Originally deployed on top of Mesosphere, I have helped migrate our infrastructure into Kubernetes cluster. I have since then moved many hackish heavily chef-relied infrastructure into Kubernetes as well. That includes many custom Chef cookbooks we have to manage thousands of vm instances. Not only that, I initiated monitoring effort, implementing Prometheus/Grafana to monitor not only our services but customer databases as well. We faced many scaling and resource challenges and came up with creative ways to send metrics such as utilizing unix socket or utilizing PIPE. I was also responsible for building scheduler to manage thousands of database backups and ensure proper business logic is in place. I was heavily involved in automating database-level operations including backup, recovery, scaling etc.
